

Monday 2nd November

Writing a Flashback Trigger

— great distraction!

As William slipped down the snowy hill, he looked at his freezing gun. He grogily and ungracefully used one eye.

— use this reading book as a flashback!

— write a flashback!

Tightly, William looked to the lockword key in his great iron hand. His mind spun quickly back, disturbance. He was outside the garage. Grandad's wrinkled fingers and William's tiny fingers and he was given a life time's worth of memory to

— For opening up sentences in different ways and varying your structure.

→ Occasional self-referential comments. Some playful ones!

→ Using first/for/there in display lines!

Friday 21st November

— we are a very talented author class! We are really focusing in Introducing Character in the second version.

Introducing Character

Success Criteria

→ Thomas, try to focus on using () and showing in more varied sentences to — show to picture finish with!

Description of appearance - focus on details

— open your sentences.

Description of thoughts and feelings

Dialogue - What is said and how (sometimes what is not said)

Action - subtle tiny action to reveal character

— using those verbs - I can feel like being young!

CK vaulting out into the night, within pages against one walling wind. His searchlight but struggling to fly away.

(T1) As his gunner was pulled away, his rising eyes fell open. I started

— Yes! Use a powerful picture of sea battles William's shoes and long hairs on his head as Now the sledge seemed to take a left of William.

(T3) It was jumping up and down, left and right but William kept his grip. The sledge tried to rip away but did not slough on its back with William marker of the will aimed.

(T2) Beams of nightlight froze his eyes. Some seconds past before he was back to life.

— features of that version past you hear that through his foot stomach blood was driving rolling of boy in parallel! His heart stopped. Was he afraid of the blackness high on the strength of some other! — using subtle with — Out of order, it came! — was not... was both at little with my gun in Monday!

William's cheeks went covered with rope! — try to use an interesting verb to use it can be to use it